Research Areas

Overview:
I am interested in two major areas of research: eating disorders/obesity and substance use treatment. For the eating disorders/obesity area, I primarily am focusing on risk factors, such as extreme body dissatisfaction. As part of this, I am exploring the association between body dissatisfaction and unhealthy dieting/exercise habits, and the role of body dissatisfaction in obesity treatment dropout and the mother-daughter relationship. My lab also regularly examines assessment issues, such as problems associated with using standard eating disorder measures with ethnic or racial minority participants. For the substance use treatment area, I am focusing on CRAFT (Community Reinforcement and Family Training); a treatment that works with the family members of treatment-refusing individuals with substance use problems. Currently we are examining how to culturally adapt CRAFT to Native American populations.

Eating Disorders/Obesity Area:

- Determining why obese ethnic minority women prematurely drop out of healthy lifestyle treatment, and exploring how to address this dilemma. We have learned that two factors in particular lead to early termination: extremely poor body image and "familism" (family comes first). We are following up with studies to address body dissatisfaction prior to a healthy lifestyle intervention.

- Examining the impact of varying responses to negative body talk ("Fat Talk") in the context of female friendships, and testing ways to respond to negative body talk that offer support but also encourage less focus on body image overall.
- Using EMA (Ecological Momentary Assessment) to examine intuitive eating.
- Understanding the relationship between nutritional preferences, actual food consumption, and body image.
- Exploring the role of media use and upward social comparisons in a biopsychosocial model of body dissatisfaction.
- Exploring the use of popular eating disorder measures (EAT, EDE-Q, EDI) in ethnic/racial minority populations, given that they were standardized (many years ago) on non-Hispanic White women.
- Exploring "healthy eating" and "dieting": what exactly do these mean to college students, and what kind of problems do they create?
- Examining the factors in a mother-daughter relationship that appear to serve a protective role against poor body image and disturbed eating in the daughter.

Substance Use Treatment Area:
- Determining the ways in which CRAFT (Community Reinforcement and Family Training) can be culturally modified to better suit Native American populations.
- Determining whether a therapist's competence (skill) in delivering CRA affects the client's outcome in a substance abuse treatment program.
